

The Ten-Year Question

For choosing when both roads could work.

STEP ONE

Write down the roads.

One line each, on paper. If there are five, be honest about which two or three you actually feel pulled toward.

STEP TWO

Ask the question of each road.

If I walked this road for ten years, who would I become?
Don't write what you'd have. Write who you'd be.

STEP THREE

Pick the answer you'd rather live inside.

That's your road. It doesn't have to feel exciting. Excitement is a terrible compass in the dark. Direction beats excitement.

STEP FOUR

One visible move before Sunday.

Not the whole journey. One move on the chosen road, with a day and a time. Scared and moving beats certain and stuck.

WHEN THE HARD PART ARRIVES

"This is not proof I chose wrong. This is the road asking me to become better at something."
